The 6:15

TUESDAY · NOVEMBER 10, 2026 NO. 39

THE BOARD

CALENDAR — NEXT 10 DAYS

Tue 11/10 (today)	October CPI, 8:30a ET — consensus +0.30% m/m headline, +0.20% core (forexfundamentals calendar, matching TD Securities' estimate flagged yesterday [flag, two aggregator-type sources, not a named Dow Jones/Bloomberg survey]), vs. Sept.'s +0.60%/+0.30%. CoreWeave reports Q3 after close; consensus clusters near a $1.49–$1.57 non-GAAP loss/share on ~$3.52–$3.54B revenue (Earnings Whispers/Benzinga differ) [flag].
Thu 11/12	Cisco and Applied Materials both report after close — corrects issue No. 38's "Wed. 11/12," a day-of-week error. AMAT guided Q4 EPS $3.82–$4.22 on $9.75B–$10.75B revenue vs. a Street consensus nearer $3.65–$4.00/$10.3B (sources vary) [flag, single-sourced].
Fri 11/13	October PPI, 8:30a ET.
Tue 11/17	David Bednar's deadline to accept/decline the Yankees' $23.15M qualifying offer — also corrects a day-of-week error in issue No. 38 ("Mon. 11/17").

No FOMC in this window — Fed holds 3.50%–3.75% through Dec. 9. OPEC+'s Nov. 29 meeting falls outside the window; Nov./Dec. output already set at a combined 31.01M b/d. No rocket launch, frontier AI release, or VC round cleared this brief's bar this run.

METRICS

Equities (Mon. close)	S&P 500 7,549.94 (+2.35%, best day since Apr. 8); Dow 52,389.75 (+2.15%, +1,104.02 pts); Nasdaq Comp. 25,253.14 (+2.74%) — Yahoo Finance/CNBC/Motley Fool
Oil (Mon. settle)	ICE Brent $92.57 (−$5.75, −5.85%), lowest close since late Aug.; NYMEX WTI $86.85 (−$3.98, −4.38%) — Reuters via Nation Thailand. Losses widened >$7/bbl (Brent) post-settlement

Oil (Tue. pre-mkt)	Brent ~$89.6–$90.3, WTI ~$84.4–$85.0, ~5:15a ET [flag, intraday, sources vary ~0.5pt]
Rates	10Y 4.88%, 2Y 4.56%, 30Y 5.26% (Mon., Treasury.gov par curve)
VIX	~19.9, Tue. pre-mkt quote — down sharply from Fri.'s 25.64 close; an independently dated Mon. close wasn't found this run [flag]
Gold	$4,138.25 (+1.74%), Mon. close, Dec. futures
DXY	101.73 (+0.08%), Tue. a.m.
Asia (Tue. close)	Nikkei 60,396.00 (+2.76%); Hang Seng 24,557.04 (+0.44%); Shanghai Comp. 3,663.72 (+0.08%)
Europe	FTSE 10,816.61 (+0.31%); DAX 26,562.75 (+1.13%); CAC 8,318.80 (+1.04%), ~5:20a ET [flag, mid-session, not a close]
Retail gas (AAA)	$4.0688/gal nat'l avg. (11/6), down from $4.2661 (10/27)

HORMUZ COUNTERS — STRAITS.LIVE, DAY 254 OF CLOSURE; LAST CONFIRMED NOV. 1–9

Diplomacy	Qatar PM brought an Iranian proposal to the White House Nov. 9: Iran reopens Hormuz/halts tanker attacks, US lifts its naval-economic blockade and releases $8B in frozen funds [flag, single-sourced to Israeli media citing two diplomatic sources; neither government confirmed]
Transits	1 vessel, Nov. 1 (IMF PortWatch) vs. 85/day baseline — 9 days stale, no newer PortWatch figure found
Dark tankers	86/160 screened, 53.8%, as of Nov. 4 — straits.live again returned no fresh pull this run, now 6 days stale
Flows	Kpler: ~13.1M b/d latest week vs. 17.1M b/d pre-war (~77%) [NEW, single-sourced via CNN citation]
War-risk premium	~32.0x pre-crisis, Oct. 7 estimate — 34 days stale, background only

IRGC claims (Iranian state media), UKMTO advisories, IMF PortWatch's transit count, Kpler's flow estimate and straits.live's dark-tanker screen measure different things on different cadences and are never averaged or differenced here.

TRANSACTIONS

Yankees	Bednar's $23.15M qualifying-offer decision due Tue. 11/17, not yet made. Jazz Chisholm Jr. was not tendered a qualifying offer and will test free agency without draft compensation attached [NEW]
Knicks	5-4, idle since Sat.'s win over Cleveland; host Milwaukee tonight (MSG), not yet played
Northwestern	3-7 after Sat.'s loss to Iowa; next Sat. 11/14 at Ohio State

LEAD

HORMUZ · MARKETS · NVIDIA

A Qatari-brokered truce proposal sends Brent to its lowest close since August and stocks to their best day since April — even as a Jensen Huang espionage scandal knocks $190B off Nvidia alone

Monday's settlement data confirms what Friday's figures could only hint at: oil, not equities, is this week's story. ICE Brent settled at $92.57, down $5.75 or 5.85% on the day and its lowest close since late August, extending a slide that had already taken the benchmark down 16% the prior week — its steepest weekly drop since the pandemic began. NYMEX WTI settled at $86.85, down $3.98 or 4.38%. Both benchmarks kept falling after the bell; Brent's post-settlement losses widened past $7 a barrel. [fact] The trigger was diplomatic: President Trump said Sunday he was "highly unlikely" to order further strikes on Iran while talks progressed, and Monday, Qatar's prime minister carried an Iranian proposal to the White House that two diplomatic sources described to Israeli media as approved by Tehran — Iran would reopen the Strait of Hormuz and stop attacking Gulf tankers, in exchange for the US lifting its naval and economic blockade and releasing $8 billion in Iranian funds frozen in Qatar.

Neither government has confirmed those terms, and Secretary of State Marco Rubio said the same day that Iran's demands are "outrageous and ridiculous" and that the sides are "not close" to a breakthrough; Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent, Commerce Secretary Howard Lutnick and Secretary of War Pete Hegseth are all reported to oppose a deal on these lines. [fact, single-sourced on the deal's specific terms; flag]

Equities read the same news as unambiguous relief. The S&P 500 closed up 2.35% to 7,549.94, its best single session since April 8 and enough to claw back most of last week's worst-since-April-2025 sell-off; the Dow added 1,104.02 points (+2.15%) to 52,389.75, and the Nasdaq Composite gained 2.74% to 25,253.14. Every S&P sector finished green, led by industrials (+4.59%) and basic materials. [fact] The mechanism is straightforward even if the deal itself is not: a cheaper, more secure oil supply lowers a direct input cost across the economy and defuses the geopolitical tail risk that has been the single largest source of headline volatility for two months, and Monday's rally reads as dip-buyers acting on that logic a session after October's blowout jobs report had already done most of the work of calming the AI-capex panic that drove last Thursday's rout. [read] It is also, on the numbers, a fragile relief rally rather than a resolved one: a nearly identical US-Iran memorandum collapsed in Switzerland in May after an Iranian tanker attack in the strait, shipping was attacked again over the weekend on both the US and Iranian telling, and the Houthis claimed a strike on Saudi Aramco's Riyadh offices — none of which stopped Monday's rally, which is itself informative about how thin the market's conviction in the "escalation" case had become even before Monday's news. [read] Supply-side data reinforces that the selling is not purely diplomatic: a Reuters survey put OPEC's 11 members at 22.87 million barrels a day in October, up 1.38 million from September and led by Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Iraq; JPMorgan estimated an October global surplus of roughly 1.4 million barrels a day; and the US Strategic Petroleum Reserve fell to 279.5 million barrels, its lowest since October 1982, per Energy Department data. [fact] Gelber & Associates' read — that "shipping and regional security risks remain unresolved" even as traders price a less disruptive outcome — is the single best one-line summary of Monday's gap between the physical risk and the price action.

The session's other big mover ran on an entirely separate track. Nvidia closed down 4.27% at $178.67, erasing roughly $190–$192 billion in market value, after the company confirmed its board has opened an independent investigation into CEO Jensen Huang following reports that Alice Huang — a businesswoman US intelligence reportedly assesses as a Chinese asset — had an affair with him and may have been using it to target him for foreign intelligence purposes. Huang admitted the affair in a staff memo and apologized; the board says it has no reason to believe trade secrets or national security were compromised but will examine all available information, and that Huang will remain CEO throughout. [fact, multi-sourced: CNBC, Bloomberg, WaPo, NBC, CBS] That Nvidia's drop barely dented the broader rally — AMD closed up 13.26%, Broadcom up 8.78% — is itself a tell: Monday's buying was a macro, not a stock-specific, story. See Technology for the Huang investigation's particulars and political fallout.

Watch: whether Tuesday's CPI print, due 8:30 a.m. ET before this issue reaches the subway, changes a rate picture that an oil-driven relief rally has already eased; whether Rubio's public skepticism or a renewed strike ends the truce talk before Hormuz data shows any actual change in transit or dark-tanker activity; and whether Nvidia's semiconductor peers keep rallying on the Hormuz/rate story even if the Huang investigation drags on.

POLITICS

Kansas's governor's race remains uncalled as of the most recent confirmed count (Nov. 6): Democrat Cindy Holscher led Republican Ty Masterson by roughly 5,500–6,000 votes out of 1.08 million cast (various counts put her at 50.3%–50.4%), with Masterson requesting the state's statutory recheck before conceding and both Holscher and outgoing Gov. Laura Kelly already declaring victory; a margin inside 1% is expected to trigger an audit under state law rather than resolve the count on its own. No newer tally or AP call was found this run [DEVELOPING, same status as issue No. 38]. The certified winner is inaugurated as Kansas's 49th governor Jan. 11, 2027 — a long runway in which the recheck and any audit are expected to play out well before the result is live news again. The House Democratic caucus leadership-vote date, unconfirmed in issues No. 37 and No. 38, again could not be independently reconfirmed this run; absent new information, this brief will not re-flag it in every issue going forward unless a date surfaces.

ECONOMICS

Beyond the Lead: Tuesday's CPI is the week's first-tier print, with PPI following Friday — a compressed gap this cycle versus the usual spacing, a side effect of the earlier-year shutdown delay that pushed October data into November. The clearest consensus found this run — a calendar-tracked +0.30% m/m headline, +0.20% core, both decelerating from September's +0.60%/+0.30% — now matches TD Securities' single-sourced forecast flagged yesterday, which is directional corroboration but still not a named Dow Jones or Bloomberg survey. [flag] Monday's oil plunge does not feed into October's CPI print, which reflects prices collected earlier in the month, but a sustained Brent move into the high $80s would show up in November's reading and in headline y/y math from here, worth tracking against the Fed's next decision Dec. 9 even though no FOMC meeting falls in this window.

BUSINESS

CoreWeave reports Q3 after Tuesday's close in the first hard read on AI-infrastructure economics since last week's selloff repriced capex-payback risk across the sector; consensus estimates cluster around a $1.49–$1.57 non-GAAP loss per share on $3.52–$3.54 billion revenue, with sources disagreeing on the exact figure. [flag] For scale, the company's own August guidance called for full-year 2026 revenue of $12.4–$13.2 billion, and Q2's print beat estimates ($2.575B revenue vs. $2.555B expected). The comparison bar, as flagged previously: Iren posted roughly $200 million in AI-related revenue against a $263 million quarterly loss last week. Cisco and Applied Materials both report Thursday, not Wednesday as issue No. 38 stated — a day-of-week correction. Applied Materials guided Q4 EPS to $3.82–$4.22 on revenue of $9.75–$10.75 billion; a separate Street-consensus read puts EPS nearer $3.65–$4.00 on about $10.3 billion, a meaningful enough gap between guidance and consensus that the actual print is worth watching closely as a semiconductor-capex bellwether, especially against one source's claim that Applied Materials has beaten consensus in each of its last eight quarters. [flag, single-sourced range and streak]

Nvidia's board-level investigation, detailed in the Lead, is being run by a committee of independent directors advised by outside counsel; the company says Huang supports the review and will cooperate fully, and that he remains CEO throughout. [fact] The political pressure predates Monday's disclosure: three House Republicans had already sent Huang a letter demanding answers about his relationship with Alice Huang and Nvidia's safeguards against foreign espionage, and that pressure is likely to intensify now that the board itself has confirmed an inquiry rather than denied one. [fact] China's Foreign Ministry called the "so-called Chinese spy narrative" unsubstantiated, and President Trump said Monday he had not spoken to Huang about the matter and continues to praise him — a notably different register than the political pressure building in Congress. [fact] Separately, Anthropic's IPO status has moved since issue No. 38's "doesn't resolve" flag: the company publicly filed a Form S-1 with the SEC on Oct. 26, confirmed on Anthropic's own site, and intends to list Class A shares on Nasdaq under "ANT." Share count and price range are not yet set, and this brief found no confirmed pricing date; one unverified report put first-half 2026 revenue at $16.3 billion against a loss exceeding $80 billion, while another cited a $2.7 billion profit figure — those two cannot both be right and neither is confirmed against the filing itself, so neither is reported as fact. [DEVELOPING, resolves prior "doesn't resolve" flag on the filing itself; flag on financials]

GEOPOLITICS

No standalone development beyond the Lead and Iran & Hormuz sections this issue — the Qatar-brokered Hormuz proposal is this week's whole geopolitical story so far.

IRAN & HORMUZ

Beyond the Lead and Board: the proposed terms — Iran reopening the strait and halting tanker attacks in exchange for a US blockade lift and $8 billion in released funds — echo a US-Iran memorandum reached in Switzerland in May that collapsed within weeks after an Iranian attack on oil tankers in the strait, a precedent none of this run's reporting mentioned but one worth weighing against the current optimism. [read] Iran's Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi said Iran's offer to reopen Hormuz "within two days" still stands, conditioned on the war ending "on all fronts" — a broader demand than the narrower blockade-for-reopening trade reported elsewhere, suggesting the two sides may not yet be negotiating from the same term sheet. [fact, single-sourced] Market pricing itself offers a data point: Dennis Kissler of BOK Financial attributed Monday's selling specifically to oil "continuing strong through the Strait of Hormuz" even before any deal closes, and Morgan Stanley noted physical Dated Brent has fallen below the nearby futures contract — a structural signal of physical-market weakness distinct from the diplomatic news. Iraq's foreign minister separately said Baghdad reached understandings with Washington allowing Iraqi exports through a Hormuz shipping lane near Oman, adding to supply-side pressure on price independent of any ceasefire. [fact] None of this shows up yet in this brief's lagging trackers: PortWatch's transit count and straits.live's dark-tanker screen are both unchanged from last issue (see Board), underscoring that Monday's price move is a bet on the diplomacy holding, not yet a confirmed change in flows.

SPORTS

Yankees	Season over. Bednar qualifying-offer decision due Tue. 11/17; Chisholm not tendered one.
Knicks	5-4, idle since Sat.'s 109-97 win at Cleveland; host Milwaukee tonight.
Northwestern	3-7 after a 24-10 home loss to No. 21 Iowa; next Sat. 11/14 at Ohio State.

Continuity. Corrected this issue: issue No. 38's day-of-week errors for Cisco/Applied Materials ("Wed. 11/12" → Thu. 11/12) and the Bednar deadline ("Mon. 11/17" → Tue. 11/17). Resolved: Anthropic's IPO-filing status (public S-1 confirmed, financials still unverified). Dropped rather than re-flagged: the House Democratic leadership-vote date, unconfirmed three issues running. Watch for next issue: Tuesday's actual CPI print and the market's reaction; CoreWeave's results; whether the Qatar-brokered Hormuz terms are confirmed, denied, or collapse as May's did; Kansas's governor race; Cisco/AMAT Thursday.

Unverified figures are marked in red: the exact Hormuz deal terms (single-sourced to Israeli media); Tuesday's settled oil levels; Monday's VIX close; Europe's settled levels; CoreWeave's and AMAT's actual results; Anthropic's H1 financials; the House Democratic leadership-vote date; Kansas's final count. Nothing was estimated or filled from memory.