CALENDAR · WEEKEND FORMAT

Next 10 days

Mon 11/9 Veterans Day observed (equities open, bond market closed); Tue 11/10 October CPI, 8:30a ET — no consensus forecast confirmed this run [flag]; Fri 11/13 October PPI, 8:30a ET; Wed 11/18 House Democratic caucus votes on its floor-leadership slate, including Hakeem Jeffries for Speaker — the Speaker floor vote itself waits for the new Congress, Jan. 3, 2027.

No FOMC meeting this window — Fed holds 3.50%-3.75%, next decision Dec. 9. OPEC+'s Nov. 1 output decision remains unconfirmed this run, continuity flag. No frontier AI release, major rocket launch, or notable new VC round cleared this brief's verification bar.

METRICS · WEEKEND FORMAT

Equities & vol

Thursday's AI-capex panic sent the Dow down >1,800 pts (-3.4%), the S&P 500 -4.4% and the Nasdaq -5.5% — worst session since April 2025, ~$3T in market cap erased, Philadelphia Semiconductor Index -12%, VIX spiking as much as +70% intraday. Friday's partial rebound: S&P 500 7,376.86 (+0.31%), Nasdaq Composite 24,579.42 (+1.09%), Dow 51,285.73 (-0.46%), VIX 25.64 (-9.01%) — CNBC/Yahoo. Week net: S&P -2.7%, Nasdaq -3.4% to -5.5% (sources vary), Dow -0.9%.

Oil, rates, other

Crude: no settle verified this run — one Yahoo-sourced wrap (11/6) put Brent "above $98" and WTI "near $91," both down double digits on the week; a separate 11/5 snapshot (5paisa.com) showed Brent $95.16/WTI $87.94; the two don't reconcile [flag]. 10Y 4.859% (Fri., Yahoo) — a Tradeweb-tagged 4.143% for the same week conflicts and isn't resolved [flag]; DXY level, 2Y/30Y and Asia/Europe closes not independently confirmed this run. Gold $4,074.90 (-0.94%, Fri., Yahoo). AAA gas $4.0203/gal (11/8, today), continuing its decline.

HORMUZ COUNTERS · STRAITS.LIVE, 08 NOV 1012Z (5:12A ET)

Status	Closed to commercial shipping since Feb. 28; this run's fetch gave no updated day count (last confirmed: Day 248, Nov. 4)
Transits	1 vessel, Nov. 1 (IMF PortWatch) vs. 85/day baseline (~1%) — down from Oct. 25's 2, now 7 days stale [DEVELOPING]
Dark tankers	86 of 160 screened, 24h (53.8%) — down sharply from Nov. 4's 69.4%; straits.live itself flags the drop as indistinguishable from ambient AIS dropout, not confirmed de-escalation [DEVELOPING]
War-risk premium	~32.0x pre-crisis, still the Oct. 7 estimate — 32 days stale, background only
Indices	Crisis Pressure 87±8 (Extreme, -1 over 24h); Escalation Forecast 55±11 (Elevated, flat)

Methodology: IRGC claims (Iranian state media), UKMTO advisories, IMF PortWatch's lagged AIS transit count and straits.live's AIS dark-tanker screen measure different things on different cadences — never averaged or differenced here.

TRANSACTIONS

Yankees	Formally extended David Bednar a $23.15M qualifying offer Nov. 2; his decision is due by Nov. 17, not yet made.
Knicks / Northwestern	No transactions this period — games only, see Sports.

LEAD

AI-CAPEX PANIC, THEN A JOBS-DATA RESCUE

Thursday's selloff erases roughly $3 trillion in market cap — worst session since April 2025 — before Friday's blowout jobs report helps claw back a third of the damage

Thursday was a crowded-trade unwind with a macro label attached. The Dow fell more than 1,800 points (-3.4%), the S&P 500 dropped 4.4% and the Nasdaq Composite fell 5.5% — the worst single session for US equities since April 2025 — erasing roughly $3 trillion in market capitalization in one day. [fact, NEW] The Philadelphia Semiconductor Index fell 12%; Nvidia dropped about 9%; Micron and AMD both fell more than 15% intraday before paring losses; AI-infrastructure plays Nebius, Iren and CoreWeave each fell double digits. [fact, NEW] The VIX spiked as much as 70% intraday before settling. [fact, NEW] The proximate trigger, as reported across multiple outlets, was a sudden repricing of AI-capex payback risk — JPMorgan's estimate of roughly $900 billion in global 2026 AI capital spending was widely cited as the number investors are now discounting against actual revenue, though no single confirmed catalyst (a specific downgrade, a specific disclosure) anchors the day [flag, single catalyst unconfirmed]. This brief has tracked the AI-capex-discipline debate since Alphabet's capex guide several issues back; Thursday is that debate's first full-blown equity-market event rather than a sector rotation.

Friday supplied the circuit breaker: data, not sentiment. October's jobs report, delayed by the shutdown earlier this year and finally released Friday at 8:30a ET, showed nonfarm payrolls up 165,000 against a consensus clustered between roughly 59,000 and 70,000 depending on the source (Dow Jones 59,000; Bloomberg 65,000; other estimates near 70,000) — a clean beat by any of the three. [fact, NEW] Unemployment fell to 4.1% versus 4.2% expected; August and September payrolls were revised up a combined 84,000, with September's print specifically revised to 60,000 from an earlier 29,000 estimate; average hourly earnings rose 0.4% month over month, putting wage growth near 3.1% year over year, roughly in line with inflation. [fact, NEW] Equities rallied on the print and on a one-day stabilization in the AI trade: the S&P 500 closed Friday at 7,376.86 (+0.31%), the Nasdaq Composite at 24,579.42 (+1.09%), while the Dow lagged at 51,285.73 (-0.46%) on continued chip-sector drag; Nvidia, AMD and Intel each rebounded Friday, reported in the high single to high single-digit percentage range depending on the name. [fact, NEW] VIX fell 9.01% to 25.64, still well above its pre-Thursday level. [fact, NEW] Even with Friday's bounce, the week closed net negative: the S&P 500 fell about 2.7%, the Nasdaq fell somewhere between 3.4% and 5.5% depending on which weekly window a given source used, and the Dow fell 0.9%. [fact, NEW]

The mechanism worth sitting with: this was a positioning shock, not a growth scare. The jobs data that helped stocks recover Friday describes an economy adding jobs faster than expected with unemployment falling and wages tracking inflation — the opposite of what would normally justify a 1,800-point Dow selloff two days earlier. [read] What moved Thursday was crowded, AI-capex-adjacent positioning in chips, memory and neocloud names re-rating on capex-payback anxiety that had been building across several of this brief's prior issues (Alphabet, Microsoft, Intel, Amazon's capex guides); Friday's data didn't resolve that anxiety, it just gave index-level buyers a reason to step back in a day after the crowded trade had already been flushed once. [read] The second-order consequence for the investor reader: Tuesday's CPI print (8:30a ET, Nov. 10) is now the next test of whether this stays a one-week, positioning-driven flush or becomes the opening leg of a larger AI-capex de-rating that spreads beyond the handful of names that led Thursday's drop. Watch Monday's open for whether Friday's stabilization holds or the selloff resumes; watch whether Qualcomm's stock settles the contested direction of its own earnings reaction (see Business); and watch the chip/neocloud names specifically, since Thursday's drop was concentrated there rather than broad-based.

POLITICS

Beyond the Lead: Hakeem Jeffries' path to the speakership has a clearer, later timeline than this brief's last issue implied. The House Democratic caucus holds its internal leadership vote — which would formally nominate Jeffries as the party's speaker candidate, needing only a simple majority of the caucus — on Nov. 18; the binding floor vote that actually elects a speaker doesn't happen until the new Congress convenes Jan. 3, 2027, requiring 218 votes. [fact, NEW, correction] Kansas and Ohio's gubernatorial races, flagged as uncalled in issue No. 36, remain uncalled this run — no certified result was found [flag, continuity].

BUSINESS

Correction to issue No. 36: Caterpillar's Q3 results were not pending as of Nov. 4 — the company reported Oct. 29, with sales up 17% year over year to $20.7 billion, EPS of $7.13 ($7.20 adjusted) versus $4.88 a year earlier, a record $78.1 billion backlog (+$6.0 billion quarter over quarter) and operating margin of 20.4% versus 17.3%. [fact, correction] Qualcomm's fiscal Q4 (reported Wednesday after close) is messier: revenue of $10.44 billion beat a consensus near $10.15-10.32 billion even as it fell roughly 7.4% year over year (QCT segment -8%, QTL -7%); EPS-surprise direction is contested between sources (one shows a miss against a $2.20 estimate, another a beat against $2.16) and the stock's own reaction was reported inconsistently across outlets — this brief won't print a settled read on either [flag]. Airbnb's Q3 was a clean beat amid the week's noise: revenue up 19% to $4.87 billion, EPS $3.16, with guidance raised. [fact, NEW]

TECHNOLOGY

The AI-capex anxiety behind Thursday's selloff has specific, less-covered data points worth flagging beyond the Lead's chip-stock moves. Iren, an AI-infrastructure/data-center operator, reported roughly $200 million in AI-related revenue against a $263 million quarterly loss — a concrete illustration of the revenue-versus-cash-burn gap investors spent Thursday repricing across the sector. [fact, NEW] Separately, and single-sourced, one report put Anthropic's expected IPO valuation at roughly $1-1.3 trillion, down from around $2 trillion discussed a month earlier [flag, single-sourced, not corroborated]. No frontier AI model release or confirmed rocket launch (Starship, Neutron, New Glenn, or Chinese equivalents) cleared this brief's verification bar this run.

IRAN & HORMUZ

The IRGC Navy's claims have run well ahead of independent confirmation again this week. Iranian state media claimed Nov. 3 that three tankers struck mines on an "unauthorized route," then claimed Nov. 4 that four tankers hit mines (two still ablaze) and a US MQ-9 drone was downed — the 56th such claim since the war began. [fact, single-sourced to Iranian state media] UKMTO's independent record for the same window shows just one incident: the Barbados-flagged shadow tanker Grit struck by "unknown projectiles" roughly 14 nautical miles northeast of Lima, Oman, overnight Nov. 3. [fact, NEW] Lloyd's List separately logged a Nov. 2 strike on the Panama-flagged bulker Era S. — a different vessel, not reconciled with the IRGC's mine claims. [fact, NEW] No new strike, incident, or claim was found dated Nov. 5-8; this brief reads that as "no confirmed escalation this week" rather than evidence of calm, since neither side's claims from Nov. 3-4 were ever fully verified either. The dark-tanker screen's sharp drop (see Board) compounds the ambiguity rather than resolving it. The Qatar/Pakistan-mediated framework shows no dated update this week; sticking points remain unchanged from mid-October (sanctions relief, frozen-asset release, an end to attacks as the price of reopening shipping).

SPORTS

Yankees	Season over (ALDS). Formally extended David Bednar a $23.15M qualifying offer Nov. 2; his decision is due by Nov. 17, not yet made.
Knicks	Beat Chicago 135-105 at home Wed. (Brunson 33) and Cleveland 109-97 on the road Sat. (Brunson 31, Towns 29) — now 5-4. Josh Hart (ankle) sat out Saturday, not considered serious.
Northwestern	Lost 24-10 at home to No. 21 Iowa Sat. — first loss at the rebuilt Ryan Field; starting QB Aidan Chiles missed the game injured. Falls to 3-7.

Continuity. Geopolitics is folded into Iran & Hormuz this issue — nothing standalone surfaced. Economics is folded into the Lead rather than carrying a separate section — Thursday's selloff and Friday's jobs print are this week's whole economic story. Correction: Caterpillar's Q3 report (Oct. 29) was mischaracterized as pending in issue No. 36; see Business. Watch for next issue: Monday's open and whether Friday's stabilization holds; Tuesday's CPI; a settled read on Qualcomm's earnings reaction; the Bednar decision (due by Nov. 17); the Nov. 18 House Democratic leadership vote; Kansas/Ohio governor-race calls; and whether the Hormuz dark-tanker screen's drop to 53.8% is noise or trend.

Unverified figures are marked in red: Friday's crude settle (three sources disagree by several dollars); DXY level, 2Y/30Y Treasury yields, and Asia/Europe closes (not independently confirmed); a conflicting Tradeweb-tagged 10Y figure (4.143%) that doesn't reconcile with Yahoo's 4.859%; Qualcomm's EPS-surprise direction and stock reaction (sources disagree); October CPI consensus (not found); OPEC+'s Nov. 1 output decision; Kansas/Ohio governor-race results; Anthropic's IPO valuation (single-sourced). Nothing was estimated or filled from memory.
